Living With Atrial Fibrillation?
You may not have to.

Mount Carmel Atrial Fibrillation Center can help.

More than 2 million Americans have the common heart rhythm condition known as atrial fibrillation. The good news is, it can be corrected. At the Mount Carmel Atrial Fibrillation Center, we help a-fib patients by providing a thorough, collaborative consultation and innovative treatments like atrial fibrillation ablation.

We've been performing electrophysiology catheter ablation for more than 15 years, and in some patients it can offer a cure. But while it's safe and effective, not everyone is a candidate.

You might be a candidate if you:

- Do not respond to medicine
- Are intolerant of medicine due to side effects
- Suffer continuous or frequent intermittent atrial fibrillation
- Have isolated atrial fibrillation
- Have significant symptoms like discomforting palpitations, tiredness or difficulty breathing
- Already require heart surgery for other reasons

If you're a candidate, you'll meet with a nurse practitioner and then be evaluated by a cardiothoracic surgeon and an electrophysiologist. Together they'll determine the best approach for you and your unique circumstances and see if they can add you to the list of the cured.
